

About The Las Vegas Museum of Art

The Las Vegas Museum of Art (LVMA) is an independent, non-profit institution founded through an exceptional public-private partnership to serve its city's more than 2.4 million year-round residents, as well as the millions of visitors who travel to Las Vegas each year. To further its mission, LVMA benefits from strategic partnerships, most notably with the Los Angeles County Museum of Art (LACMA).

Scheduled to open in 2029, the Museum's 60,000-square-foot flagship building is designed by Pritzker Prize-winning architect Francis Kéré. This signature building will serve as a vibrant cultural anchor in Symphony Park, neighboring the city's downtown arts district.

In the lead-up to the inaugurations of its Kéré building, the Museum will open LVMA: Grand Central Galleries in April 2027. Located in Downtown Las Vegas, this 15,000-square-foot standalone space will serve LVMA as a permanent second location: a multi-use exhibition and media gallery offering public programming and educational initiatives.

LVMA is led by Executive Director Heather Harmon and governed by a board of Trustees who include Kevyn Wynn, Gillian Wynn, Dana Lee, Roger Thomas, Gard Jameson, Perry Rogers, and Michael Govan. The late Elaine Wynn was Chair Emerita.
